Jessica is Special Counsel in the elder financial abuse practice at Moores.

Jessica Latimer heads up the elder financial abuse practice at Moores, which is one of the only dedicated elder financial abuse practices in Australia.

The elder financial abuse practice encompasses a broad range of legal areas including property, contract, equity and tort. Jessica's clients are as variable as her practice - older clients, validly appointed legal decision makers, family members suspected of perpetrating elder financial abuse or unrelated concerned third parties (such as neighbours or friends). In addition to managing the elder financial abuse practice, Jessica continues at Moores to assist clients involved in complex commercial disputes, having practiced almost exclusively as a dispute resolution and litigation lawyer over the past decade.

Jessica joined Moores after 10 years at one of Australia's leading consumer law firms. During that time, Jessica worked in a wide range of commercial and general litigation, estate litigation and other matters. Jessica has developed a reputation as a tenacious litigation lawyer whose advice is tailored to her client's objectives and circumstances. Jessica's clients value her no-nonsense approach and her direct and pragmatic style.

Jessica graduated with an honours degree in law in 2005. Prior to studying law, Jessica completed a Bachelor of Applied Science (Radiation Therapy) and worked for a period of time treating tumours and cancers with radiation.

Jessica regularly presents to legal and other professional audiences regarding elder financial abuse and professional negligence claims.
