Skye Rose is a Principal in the Corporate Advisory Team and leads the workplace relations practice at Moores.

Skye Rose was named the Law Institute of Victoria's Government Lawyer of the Year in 2015, following her involvement in several high-profile strategic litigation matters.

With over ten years' experience representing both employees and employers, Skye has an aptitude for resolving matters quickly and effectively, and understands how to use the strategies employed by opposing counsel to get the best results for her clients. Skye also has extensive experience in helping organisations to create a child-safe culture and meet the complex legal obligations that apply across Australia.

In 2016, Skye was appointed as a Member of the Independent Advisory Board for Victoria Police and provides expert advice to address sex discrimination, sexual harassment and predatory behaviour in Victoria Police.

Skye has appeared before Parliamentary Inquiries on discrimination, human rights and access to justice issues, and has extensive experience in managing national projects on discrimination and employment relations.

Skye provides responsive, practical and commercial legal advice with particular focus on:

- Employment litigation, including discrimination, unfair dismissal, general protection, underpayment, breach of contract and restraint of trade disputes.

- Disciplinary processes and investigations.
- Performance management.
- Terminating employment (including redundancy).
- Executive and director issues.
- Enforcing post-employment obligations.
- Workplace restructures.
- Transfer of business.
- Managing ill and injured workers through the return-to-work process.

Skye is in demand as a speaker and presents regularly on employment and child safety at workplaces, conferences and industry forums.
